Does Society Need Scruples?

Prof. dr. Tomáš Halík

School of Catholic Theology

2016 Annual Lecture Christianity and Society: Does Society Need Scruples?

About the theme

In our secular Western society, we enjoy freedom and welfare at a level unrivalled in history. High efficiency levels generated high income per capita but, at the same time, at tremendous cost of humanity: eventually our sense of moral and human dignity is at stake. Liberal welfare states have become a framework of paradoxes: extremely high personal incomes for a few, poverty and marginalization for many; permanent jobs for a few, flexible labour for many. We have been poor stewards, leaving future generations an earth that is too warm and depleted of resources. Are we willing to share some of our wealth with refugees who have lost everything?

Churches have witnessed diminished attendance, while at the same time spiritual centres flourish and monasteries receive more guests than ever.

A pastoral message of hope is badly needed: a theological language to enable a dialogue with both secular atheists and Islam. The social teaching of the Church may guide us towards a society based on equality and solidarity.

Keynote speaker Prof. dr. Tomáš Halík

Tomáš Halík may be best known for his book Patience with God: The Story of Zacchaeus Continuing in Us. In it, he invites us into the gospel story of Zacchaeus to reflect on a little man on the fringe of society. Like Zacchaeus we have questions and doubts and, like him, we need to respond to Jesus' call and climb down from our comfort zone. His message points to believers and atheists alike. As seekers we have much in common since we both have been marginalised by a dominant secularism. He writes in a pastoral rather than a theological tone, which explains his vast audience.

Tomáš Halík, professor of Philosophy and Theology at Charles University in Prague, is a priest. He knows society without religion by experience. Tomáš Halík is one of the most influential theologians of our time.
